

Cleantech Financing

Cleantech companies from around the world are working to reduce the environmental impact of human development through the use of cleaner and more efficient fuels and technologies. In recent years, investors seeking growth opportunities have focused on such companies as part of a sound investment strategy from start-up through to IPO. Venture capital investment in cleantech businesses in North America has grown dramatically. Cleantech companies with revenues or products at an advanced stage of development or commercialization, may benefit greatly from this trend by going public on the TSX or TSX Venture Exchange. Gowlings is a proven leader in advising clean tech companies and their investors, and we work closely with our clients to secure their growth in the capital markets.

Gowlings uses a multidisciplinary team of legal experts to assist cleantech companies excel from early stage enterprise to IPO and beyond. In addition, Gowlings fulfills all of the legal service needs of cleantech companies by providing counsel on protecting intellectual property, accessing government technology support programs, developing commercialization strategies, and navigating federal and provincial legislation and regulations. Gowlings also regularly assists cleantech companies with mergers and acquisitions, environmental, tax, employment, privacy, and government relations and regulatory affairs.

When cleantech companies reach out to Canada's capital markets, they choose Gowlings to ensure that nothing stands between them and success.
